Gen. Rousseau's Cpeach.

The two chief speakers on the occasion of e late public meeting in Brooklyn were Major Ceneral Rousseau, and John Van Buren. In order to give our readers some insight into the views and sentiments of that class of men who systain President Johnson, and oppose the Redicals, we make a few brief extracts from the speeches of the two prominent speakers.

Caid General Rousseau: "I never dreamed that when all the fighting was done, when peace was declared, when the enemies of the country were disarmed and helpless, that it would be claimed that all our efforts were lost, and that the rebels had, in fact, accomplished the dissolution of this Union .-Bet, strange to say, men who have declared most solemnly, up to the surrender of Lee and Johnson, that the Union could not be dissolved. now tell us that the Union is in fact dissolved. These men, who have got the nation to expend its strength, its half a million of lives, and four thousand millions of dollars, now tell us that all that expenditure was for nothing, and that the Union is dissolved. [Shame.] Strange doctrine, my countrymen, for those who have all their lives contended for the very op; osite doctrine. Because we will not throw away the Constitution of the United States and submit | new and beautiful. to the distation of Thaddeus Stevens we are denounced as traitors to the country. You well hiss, my friends, at that name. I wish I had language to denounce it as I feel. [Applacee.] A man, my countrymen, who comes forward now, in this day-when we want but little more to have the Union restored, and the Constitution of the United 171 States, and all our relations to the general gov erement as they were before the war-and plaees himself between that need of his country and its accomplishments; who declares that the restoration shall not take place, pecause, if it does, the Republican party will go down, bat man is a miscreant that I can't find words to express my detestation for. [Applause.] For ave years, fellow-citizens, the theory of the Republican party has been the opposite of what it now is I have not been a Republican any more than I have been a Democrat. I wasa Whig. Lama Union man. [Applause.] Pet I gave to that party a blind support in the prosecution of the war. I asked no questions; believed that we were compelled to put down the rebellion in order to have the peace that we "Weil, gentlemen, the loyal men down South are not afraid of the rebels. I think not. We have a perfect understanding with each other. And I, for one, my countrymen, can say to you of those Southern people to-day-and you also know it—they mean what they say. When they meant to seconde, they said it. And they held to that cause so long and so faithfully, that in all the war there never was a regiment abandoned its colors and came into the Federal army ac deserters. That adhesion is an earnest that they submit. I do not belive one word of possible; the bitterness is not yet passed away. But I must say this to you, and you will agree with me, that you have a state of things un-hoped for by the most hopeful. You have a promising condition now I did not expect to demen, it is an unprecedented condition of things. We have had many bad men, who brought all this trouble; they have not ceased their opposition to government and never will. But they have done fighting. If they submit to the laws of the land it is all we can ask .oir. Lincoln never asked for anything else .e told them to lay down their arms and submit to the laws of the land. You cannot make people love each other. You cannot even make t man love his wife of his own accord."

The following passage shows that General Rosseau not only comprehends, but is fully imbeed with the spirit that inspires the whole policy of President Johnson; and that like him he feels that his first duty is, not to party, but to country. It is cheering to hear him thus express himself:

"Before I close, I say we are now, in my humble judgment, in a more serious contest, if anything could be more serious than that of armed rebellion. We are now contending with a set men who are not seeking to overturn our government by arms for they have not the courage to do that. But in the name of the Union and the Constitution they will overturn both. And the case of the Southern States to-day may be yours to-morrow. Because what may happen for one State with one party in power may be for other States when that party loses power. What we want is a common rule for all. We do not want our rights to depend upon the ascendency of any party. You want a rule beyond which no party can go in invading your rights. But your Constitution is in danger, and if the theoites and purposes of this party are carried out, it is gone.".
